- 1/1999-11/1999 Consultant for the Cancer and Chronic Disease Consortium of El Paso, responsible for evaluating the planning year of the development of a cardiovascular disease prevention program (CDC funded).
- 4/97 Consultant for the World Bank in Bolivia. I was responsible for the supervision of the Integrated Primary Health Care Project (PROISS). The PROISS Project was aimed at expanding access and improving the quality of health services offered in the four largest Bolivian municipalities (La Paz, El Alto, Cochabamba and Santa Cruz).
- 7/92 Consultant for the World Bank in Colombia. As a consultant, I assisted in the preparation of a health project aimed at improving the quality of the municipal health services in a selected number of Colombian municipalities and departments. More, specifically I was responsible for defining the basic health services package.
- 6/92 Consultant for the World Bank in Chad. I participated in the preparation of the first World Bank financed health project. I was responsible for gathering information on communicable diseases, health personnel management strategies and the administration of vertical programs.
- 5/92 Consultant for the World Bank in Mozambique. I was responsible for developing the human resources component of the second World Bank health project.
- 3-4/92 Consultant for the Ministry of Health in Colombia. The main objective of the project was to assess the decentralization process in a selected number of municipalities and departments, to describe the main successes and problems attributable to the decentralization policy, and to make recommendations for the future.
- 2/92 Consultant for the Urban Institute, Washington D.C. I wrote a case study on the process and impact of the integration of the health service networks of the Social Security (CCSS) and the Ministry of Health in Costa Rica.
- 10-12/91 Consultant for the World Health Organization in Papua New Guinea. (PNG HMD 002 - Training in Community Medicine). I was responsible for conducting a Task Analysis survey of nurses and health inspectors. The information collected was to be used to define curricula and supervision indicators for these two professional groups.
- 11/91 Consultant for the World Bank in Mozambique. I assisted in preparing a health project aimed at improving the delivery of health care services by the Ministry of Health. The project had several components including management and administration, human resource development, health education, disease control, and rehabilitation of the physical infrastructure. I was responsible for the Human Resources component.

- 6-7/91 Consultant for a project financed by the US Agency of International Development (USAID) in Mozambique. My contract was administered through The Research Triangle Institute. I conducted the Institutional and Administrative analysis of the central office of Ministry of Health in Maputo and in two Mozambican provinces (Niassa and Zambezia). In addition, I participated in the description of a 20 million project aimed at: (1) improving the financial and managerial capabilities of the Ministry of Health at the central and provincial levels, (2) improving the procurement of Essential Drugs and (3) supporting family planning activities.
- 9/90 Consultant for an USAID funded project administered through Development Technologies in Panama. The aim of project was to assess the impact of the economic crisis on access to health services. I was responsible for studying the implications of separating the network of services operated by personnel of the Ministry of Health from the network of services provided by the Social Security Fund.

^d While I worked in the operations department at the World Bank (1992-1997) I did not have the opportunity to write academic articles. However I did produce a number of Technical and Project Supervision Reports: an average of 6 per year. My first 30 months at the University of Texas (5/1997-11/1999) were almost exclusively devoted to administrative duties and teaching.
